INTERVAL HOUSE
working to end domestic violence

ANNUAL REPORT

Fiscal Year 2017-18

Every day, a woman arrives at our safe house with her children. Often, it is an act of sheer will because that is the only resource she has left. She stands at the core of the decision making -- stay or go, take my children from all they know or reach for something better. Interval House meets her with the promise that we will do all we can to keep her and her children safe and help guide her to a new life free of fear and violence. Make no mistake, we also serve men who reach out desperate and with no resources. We do not turn away anyone escaping intimate partner and family violence.

This year has been challenging. A significant increase in safe house residency, number of children (from infants to late teens), ancillary and difficult issues our clients bring and complexity in the cases we advocate in the courts have put additional pressure on our skills and resources. The extraordinary staff and volunteers at Interval House have met the challenge and our generous funders -- government, institutional and individual -- have supported us.

The numbers are below. The story though is here. We could not have done the work we have done without the funding and support from a broad constituency of committed supporters. I thank you, the staff at Interval House thanks you and the women, men and children we serve thank you.
